Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .point by putting the great emphasis now-a-days upon methods? Is not the real question, not how shall we teach, but how much shall we teach? If the average pupil has only time allowed him to acquire the elements of the three R s, have we not erred in crowding them aside by enriching the curriculum with nature study and other new applicants for favor? Has not Dr. Harris rightly interpreted the needs of civilization in his restoration of reading, writing, and arithmetic to the leading place in the course of study? 1 These fundamental questions depend so largely upon the actual amount of schooling that we can count upon in the case of the average child, that much effort would be justified in attempting to determine the latter. There is probably nowhere in educational literature a scientific demonstration of the number that drop permanently out of school at the close of each grade. The aim of this paper is indicated above. It is to ascertain at what grade the pupils in the public schools drop out--what per cent. go no further than the first grade, what per cent. stop with the second grade, what per cent. with the primary school, 1 Report of the Committee of Fifteen in the Proceedings of the National Educational Association, 1895, pp. 290-6. what per cent. with the grammar school, and what percent. reach the high school. By a comparison of the facts thus ascertained with the statistics of other cities...
