It did not appear in a globular form, as it passed over Carlisle; but tapered in the manner represented in Fig. 3. Its head seemed to be about 14 inches in diameter, and its length, from head to tail, about 5 yards. It appeared much brighter than the moon, and lightened the atmosphere to such a degree, that a person, who stood in the street, could easily have distinguished the difference between a small needle and a pin, if a they had been lying on the ground before him. It emitted several sparks as it went along, and continued in sight about 25 seconds. About a minute after it disappeared, there were two explosions immediately following one another, of a hollow...
