I have another errand for John to do at the same time, whispered Miss Clarence to the girl; tell him to wait till after breakfast. While these domestic inquiries had been making, Miss Clarence had prepared some remarkably fine black tea, just received from New-York--the gardener had sent in a basket of strawberries, the first product of the season--and the cook had found a mislaid loaf of the favorite bread; and when Miss Emilie Layton returned from her walk, all radiant and glowing with beauty, health, and spirits, Mr. Clarence was in the best humor possible. Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily! he exclaimed. Pardon me, my dear little girl, I do not often quote, even prose; but you look so like the spirit of the jocund morning --he drew her chair close to himself, kissed her white dimpled hand-- the privilege of an old man, Miss Emilie--don t look cast-down, Louis; every dog must have his day. What delightful spirits you are in, Mr. Clarence! said the young lady. Spirits! ah, my dear Emilie, bless your stars that you did not see me half an hour sooner. I have been tormenting poor Gertrude and Louis; but I can t help it--I believe spirits, sensibility, every thing, as a friend of mine says, depend on the state of the stomach. Don t eat that egg--take some of these strawberries, Miss Layton; they are delicious haut beds. I prefer the egg, sir; I am very hungry. Stop, my...
