By Joe Correa CSN We are all familiar with the unpleasantness of acne. It usually comes around in our adolescence and puberty, varying from person to person. Acne can appear almost everywhere on the skin. It usually appears on the face, neck, shoulders, or back. This condition is visually unpleasant. It affects our social life, leaves scars, lowers our confidence, and has a great affect on other everyday situations. Acne can also indicate a serious hormonal imbalance and should be treated professionally. Acne is often treated with drugs and cosmetic products making it a very profitable industry worldwide. However, these products often don t cure acne the way they should. They temporarily cure the visible part but don t create a significant affect on the cause of this condition. In order to cure both: hormonal imbalance that causes acne, and to heal your skin once and for all, you will have to dig a little further into what the real problem is. Studies...
